

World's Most Interesting Intern at Cisco

Greg Justice

Greg Justice here, working for Cisco Systems this summer, recording a track for all my interns.

Cisco announced Cisco would like, all across the globe, working that eight-to-five, even though you hate to drive in traffic, and into a campus of buildings that all look alike.

Why do all the buildings look alike, Man? I love it! Corporate symmetry.

Cisco Systems intern. California resident. I just snapped a pretty cool event with the President of Russia.

Day eight on the job and I just saw the President of Russia.

Man I bet you never, ever, ever got a chance to see the President of Russia.

Okay. Here we go.

I'm courteous and affable. My name badge is just retractable. You other interns laughable. Your thermos must be half as full.

Six, seven staffable. You can't find your ass this tall. Learn to play some basketball. Or finish off this task on call.

When I rap, I have to win. In the breakroom back again. With no books stacks of pens. Sounding off these acronyms. CDO, EBC, GBO and CBT. VPN, CEO, sounding like C3PO.

Two things that you need to know. Always clean and never late. Known to rock a cubicle and show my face on clever tapes.

Working on my ThinkPad. Send the mail every day. Natural to think that I'm talented in every way.

Live post. Twitter tweet. I'm never where the twitters beep. Social network wizardry. I'm all about the synergy.

The Goo-goo-zilla interests me. And I've got the best hair. Three words that I'll leave you with, ergonomic desk chair. Uh. Okay. All vertebrae aligned in my ergonomic desk chair. Yes. All the time. It's like an all day massage in my Ergonomic Desk Chair.

© 2010 Cisco and/or its affiliates. All rights reserved.